Of the diverse, temporally- and geographically-restricted vector tick species, Boophilus microplus is one of the primary biological vectors of anaplasmosis and babesiosis in ruminants worldwide. Immunologic characterization of the cattle tick is essential to accurately describe vector and pathogen transmission patterns in endemic areas and to aid in the design of immuno-based strategies to control B. microplus. Sensitive assays that are non- or minimally- invasive and representative of the overall cattle anti-tick immune response are essential for accurate, descriptive surveys of host responses to B. microplus. In this review, we detail the serologic assays used to assess the anti-tick immune response of cattle to B. microplus and the important factors that influence the sensitivity and accuracy of these assays.

Google Roll for iOS Released Today Mountain View, CA – It was one year ago, to the day, that Google released a prototype of an app that mimicked the way you'd follow football games on the Google maps interface. Today, Mountain View has relaunched Roll for iOS, giving iOS users a free, interactive way to follow the local college football teams and compete in online bracket pools. The app, which was released a year ago at the Google I/O conference in San Francisco, is already available for iOS devices and is now available for free download on iTunes. The Roll app gives users the ability to follow their favorite college football teams and experience what it's like to follow their favorite college teams live, from home. The app requires a subscription, but the free, experimental version is available for users to try out. Once a user has earned the privilege to post comments and participate in bracket pools, they will be charged a monthly fee of $3.99 to unlock the full version of the app.

Features Join the conversation - Users can not only follow their favorite teams, but also choose the conversations they want to follow, and which teams they don't want to hear from. Users can also choose to be a volunteer or a judge, if they wish to participate in the conversation on the live feed Be in the know -
