Growing up in a small town, I had many opportunities to observe the world around me and I've found most of my design inspiration from life and what it has to offer. When I was a teenager, I grew very interested in photography, spending most of my free time either making pictures with my camera or just making them. It was an innocent hobby that had me so inspired that I'd spend all my time taking pictures on the streets or sitting on the sidewalk in front of my house. The only problem I had was trying to put my pictures online. It wasn't until my friends and I began using Isohunt, that I found a reliable website where I could share my work. It was then that I began to use Isohunt as a way to get all of my high-quality photos on the internet. I've never stopped using Isohunt as a way to express my creative side, and it's allowed me to do so for many years. Most of the times when I'm looking at something or making a design, I'm always trying to find the simple things in life that can make us remember and share that with others. Some of my favorites include a simple picture frame or a creative patterned throw blanket. This is how I've found most of my inspiration for how I create. I tend to get all of my inspiration from what's going on around me. Growing up in a small town, I had many opportunities

PhotoMonkee is a unique and extraordinary image editing application for a variety of picture types. Its speed and power, with additional features like editing on many layers, and rich toolsets, are to be seen as the main selling points. The canvas is rectangular and allows for all kinds of modifications. The toolbox is a kind of checklist, allowing you to apply various effects in different ways. There are no presets, but you are free to create your own editing collection. Of course, this also includes the possibility of editing pictures on several layers. PhotoMonkee has a dark, which makes it easy to read and adapt. In the upper-right corner, you can adjust settings, with date, time, and magnification being available to you in the standard toolbar. Image preview is also possible, while once it is displayed it is possible to scale, rotate, or flip the picture around. The application allows you to import BMP, PNG, JPEG, GIF, ICO, and PBM, as well as TGA, TIFF, and XBM images. Export is possible, but only in the aforementioned formats. The same goes for picture adjustments, with modifications made in each area being saved in the picture's history.

PhotoMonkee is a great and versatile image editing application, and is definitely worth a look.

Description: The next-gen HDR image editor for Mac OS X is here: Exposure 11. Before we get started, a quick introduction: Exposure 11 is a complete solution for photographers who love to work with HDR images, whether they're trying to capture stunning landscapes, dramatic sunsets, or something in between. From the get-go, you have complete control over your image adjustments. You can work on all four images of the high dynamic range bracketed shot in one place, allowing you to check your work at any time. You can also export your finished images in a variety of different formats. Once you've taken the images you want, and placed them in Exposure 11, you can start the process of creating a high dynamic range bracketed shot. The app automatically analyzes the images and, if a compatible camera is present, allows you to take an HDR image and create an HDR tone-mapped image. What exactly is an HDR image? A high dynamic range image uses a bracketed set of images that are taken at different exposures to capture a wide range of light and shadow details. On the other hand, a HDR tone-mapped image uses the same image with a different set of adjustments to achieve a wider dynamic range and provide more detail. Exposure 11 has been carefully designed to improve on the previous version and, while it still retains the simplicity that made the earlier version so intuitive, it gives you more tools at your disposal. With Exposure 11, your bracketed image is shared among all four images to
