However, it was the most recent competitive poll within the state. From December 3rd to 4th, we found Obama ahead of Romney 49-45. PredictIt, the state's most popular betting site, currently sees an average of an Obama win over Romney coming in at 52.1. Turnout, which historically drives both of these kinds of races, was 60.6 percent in the last official election, and at the end of last month dropped to 59.9 percent. It's possible that turnout spiked this time, but it may have tailed off a bit since. We've looked at PA many times before, including most recently in July. Romney's and Obama's respective advantages in PA have ranged from razor thin (Dem) to as much as nine points (GOP). The only time that one of them has ever led the state by more than a point has been late in the 2008 cycle, when Obama led McCain 50.8-48.2. In Pennsylvania, Romney is up 49-45, Obama is at 47-48, and Libertarian Gary Johnson gets 1.9 percent.Swimming at the 1996 Summer Olympics - Women's 50 metre freestyle The women's 50 metre fre c9d1549cdd

4 The Frantic Dimension is a four-player cooperative board game published by Z-Man Games in 2005. Originally conceived by John Van Ham and known as "Super-Dimension", the board game is a simplified reworking of the "more-beefy, more-bulky" Dimensions of Time series. Players take on the roles of rival superheroes, who must work together to prevent the world from ending. The game captures the fast-paced, easy-to-learn qualities of the Dimensions of Time series, while simplifying it down into a board game form. Frantic Dimension is a highly enjoyable cooperative adventure in which, in a sci-fi setting, a group of superheroes must protect the Earth from alien invasion. The theme is a mixture of Superhero comics and sci-fi stories. Frantic Dimension is based on the comic book character, The Frantic, a vigilante superhero, created by John Van Ham. The game was supported and promoted by The Illustrated Daily Planet, a comic which was published by DC Comics and has a popular following in comic book game culture. The support and promotion of Frantic Dimension in the comic has helped to build an active online community of players. The board game was rated the third most popular board game on BoardGameGeek in 2012. A standalone version of Frantic Dimension was published by Z-Man Games in 2012, called The Frantic Dimension II: The Lost Legion. Unlike the original game, which is set in the science fiction universe of the original comic book, the new game, set in a high fantasy universe, takes place shortly after the events of the original comic. The authors were hired by Markovitz Publishing for a version of the game in German called Dimension Oberzeit, published in 2008. Gameplay There are four players, not five, not six. The game features a secondary dimension (the Frantic Dimension) which can be entered by all four players simultaneously. Once everyone has entered their Frantic Dimension, the scene merges with the primary, facing one another on a primary board game board (also with different dimensions) with four sets of rules. Players are supposed to strike a bargain with one another, while wreaking revenge on their enemies. (Some traditional Dimension games (such as Anguished Dimension) use five players, with two of the players choosing to take on the role of the negative influence or have their characters wander off. The game's rules are divided into "batt
